North Carolina Museum of Art Receives Grant from the Mandell Foundation

The grant supports the reinstallation of the Museum’s Judaic Art Gallery, to go on view October 2022

Raleigh, N.C.–The North Carolina Museum of Art (NCMA) has received a $50,000 grant from the Samuel P. Mandell Foundation to support the 2022 reinstallation of the People’s Collection, specifically the Judaic Art Gallery. The grant will support digital labels and hardware, reinstallation, new cases, updates to the gallery walls, key loans, and conservation related to the reimagined gallery.

"The Samuel P. Mandell Foundation is pleased to be able to support the expansion of this collection of Judaic art," said Robin Mandell Green, a Raleigh resident and trustee of the foundation. "My grandfather Samuel, who started this foundation in the late 1950s, was an avid supporter of Jewish causes and, in my opinion, would be thrilled with this donation. I cannot wait to see the final display late next year."

The NCMA’s galleries are set to undergo a transformation, the first since the opening in 2010 of its West Building, which was purpose built especially to showcase the collection. The reimagined presentation will feature new thematic and interpretive galleries. This exciting reinstallation of artworks connects the collection across place and time; features major loans from North Carolina and national and international museums; and debuts new, site-specific commissioned works, providing a more dynamic and accessible experience of the arts. The new organization of the galleries will go on view October 2022.

Since its opening in 1983, the NCMA’s Judaic Art Gallery has served as one of the most visible expressions of Jewish culture in the Southeast. Today the NCMA remains one of only two art museums in the country with a permanent gallery dedicated to the ceremonial art of Jewish religion and culture. The vibrant and engaging collection is a celebration of ceremonial art of the Jewish people, a bridge of understanding for non-Jewish visitors, and a tangible connection to our shared humanity. Over the past 38 years, the NCMA has amassed a top-tier art collection, recognizing the power, beauty, and importance of works of Jewish culture.

“The reinstallation of the Judaic Art Gallery will move visitors to experience this captivating display of beautiful and historic ceremonial objects in such a way that will heighten their appreciation of the art historical importance of these works of art. The new Judaic gallery will provide a powerful context for exploring beauty, artistry, history, and diverse local and transnational cultures and learning how personal and communal faith, identity, and heritage are expressed and embodied through art,” said consulting curator Gabe Goldstein.

In October 2022 the Judaic Art Gallery will relocate to a different gallery within the Museum’s West Building, placing the collection in the context of the European art collection and other liturgical and religious art in the collection. This new installation will prioritize visitors’ interactions with the Judaic collection, with the intention to bring new and diverse narratives to light, since the new organization of the collection explores the human experience across space and time. In addition to moving the Judaic collection, the Museum will enhance its entire reinstallation by highlighting new acquisitions, including major and significant works of art. Outside of this dedicated space, the reinstallation will also integrate Judaic works of art across the collection galleries to emphasize shared humanity.

“We’re grateful to the Mandell Foundation for supporting this transformation of our collection of Judaic art,” said Museum Director Valerie Hillings. “The grant ensures the Judaic Art Gallery will continue to represent fully the artistic and spiritual lives of the Jewish people worldwide.”

Technology will also be a featured element of the reinstallation, with new research on select artworks in the collection featured on digital labels covering provenance and new revelations found by researchers, conservators, and curators—such as the use of computer imaging revealing previously indecipherable markings and identifying previously unknown marks of artists. Other interpretive elements include a digital kiosk with high-resolution images, basic object information, and videos with deeper context on the ritual use of the objects. Visitors of all ages will be able to explore and connect to the objects on a deeper level through these interpretive stations, which also include three-dimensional scans and educational games, all designed to make information more accessible to visitors. Some labels and print resources will also be available in Spanish.

About the North Carolina Museum of Art

The North Carolina Museum of Art’s collection spans more than 5,000 years, from antiquity to the present, making the institution one of the premier art museums in the South. The Museum’s collection provides educational, aesthetic, intellectual, and cultural experiences for the citizens of North Carolina and beyond. The 164-acre Museum Park showcases the connection between art and nature through site-specific works of environmental art. The Museum offers changing special exhibitions, classes, lectures, family activities, films, and concerts.

The Museum is located at 2110 Blue Ridge Road in Raleigh and is home to the People’s Collection. It is the art museum of the State of North Carolina, under the auspices of Governor Roy Cooper; an agency of the Department of Natural and Cultural Resources, guided by the direction of Secretary D. Reid Wilson; and led by Director Valerie Hillings.
